Federal agents reviewing employee island property deals in Cuyahoga County corruption probe

MARBLEHEAD – J. Kevin Kelley, the low-profile Cuyahoga County information technology administrator, likes the secluded getaway of Johnson's Island so much that he owns two properties here, including one with a two-story waterfront house under construction.

Scott Shaw/The Plain Dealer

A blasted-out quarry on Johnson's Island is lined with luxurious homes and private docks. Construction began this spring on houses belonging to J. Kevin Kelley, left, and Joe Gouker, right. Boats at Kelley's dock include a Sea Ray registered to the head of Plumbers Local 55, a 24-foot motorboat registered to Kelley and two personal watercraft. Kelley's docks are in place.

Kelley's home will overlook a blasted-out quarry that is lined with million-dollar homes complete with gazebos, turrets and private docks. Kelley's docks are in place.

FBI and IRS agents had paid a visit to Kelley on the mainland earlier in the week. They raided his $298,000 Parma home and his office in the county engineer's building July 28.

But now, this tiny island on scenic Sandusky Bay has become a focal point of the federal investigation into possible corruption by Cuyahoga County officials, with suspicions that they may have traded jobs and contracts for free improvements to their homes. A number of people related to the case turn up here.

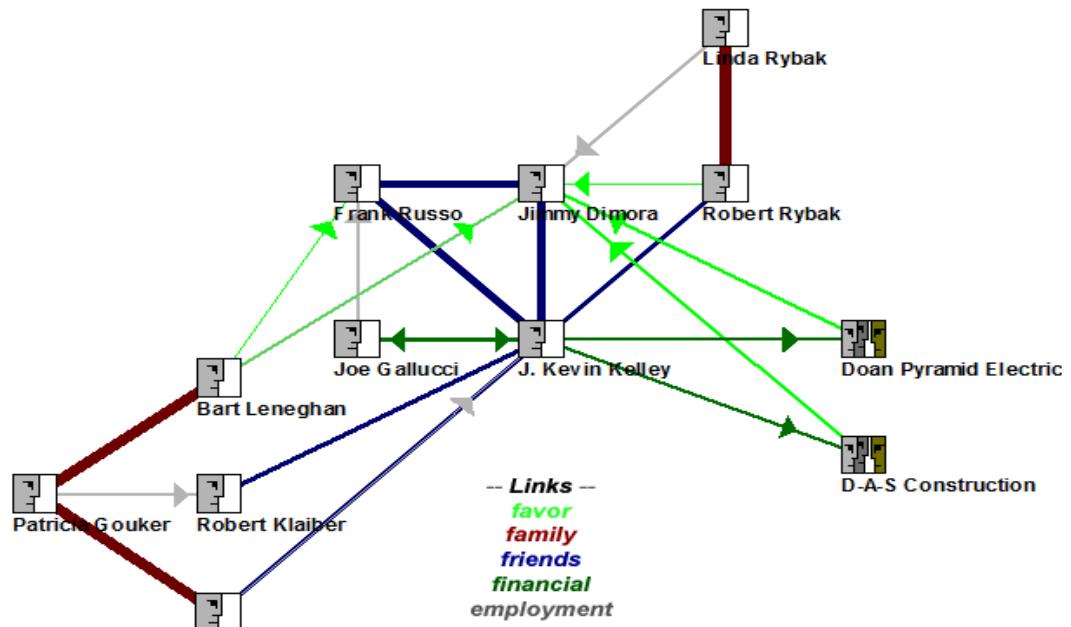

Building his own home next door to Kelley is Joe Gouker, a Parma School District official who was served a subpoena last week by the FBI in connection with the probe. His wife, Patricia, is personnel administrator for the county engineer.

Also on the island is Bart Leneghan, deputy director of the county's central services, a key position.

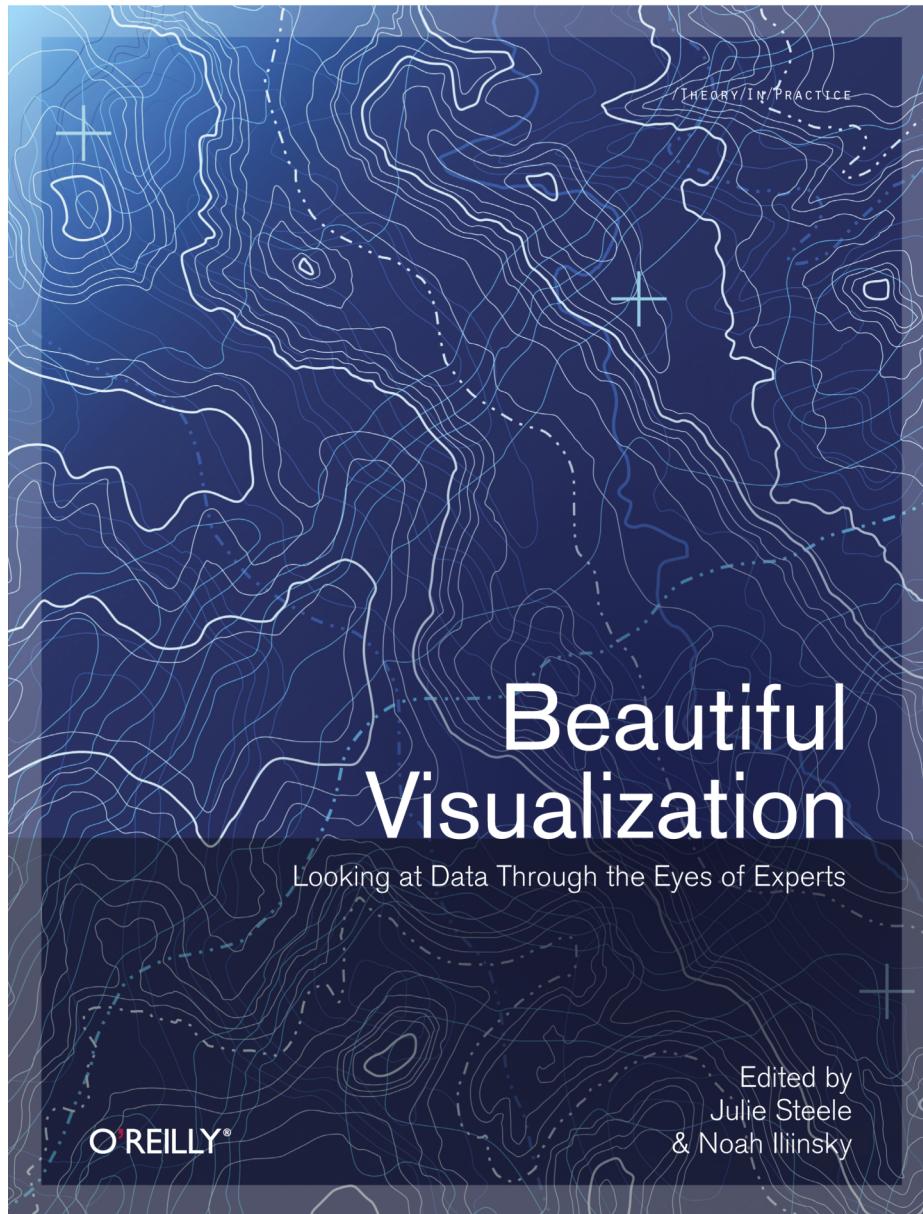

Leneghan was named in the search warrants of the offices of County Commissioner Jimmy Dimora and Auditor Frank Russo. Patricia Gouker is Leneghan's sister.

Docked outside Kelley's new home last week was a boat owned by a top union official, who, an acquaintance said, did work on Dimora's property.

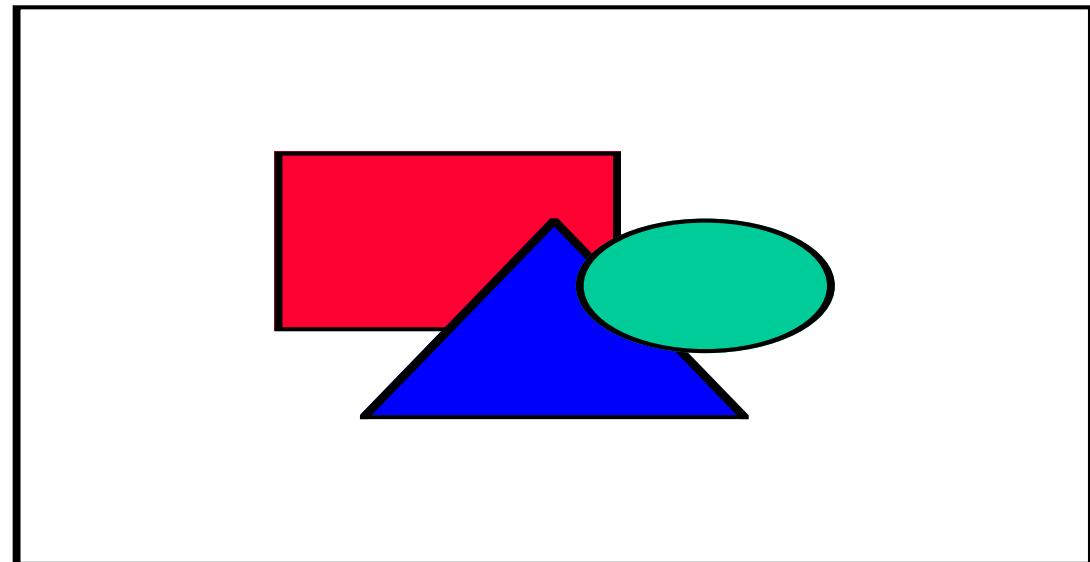

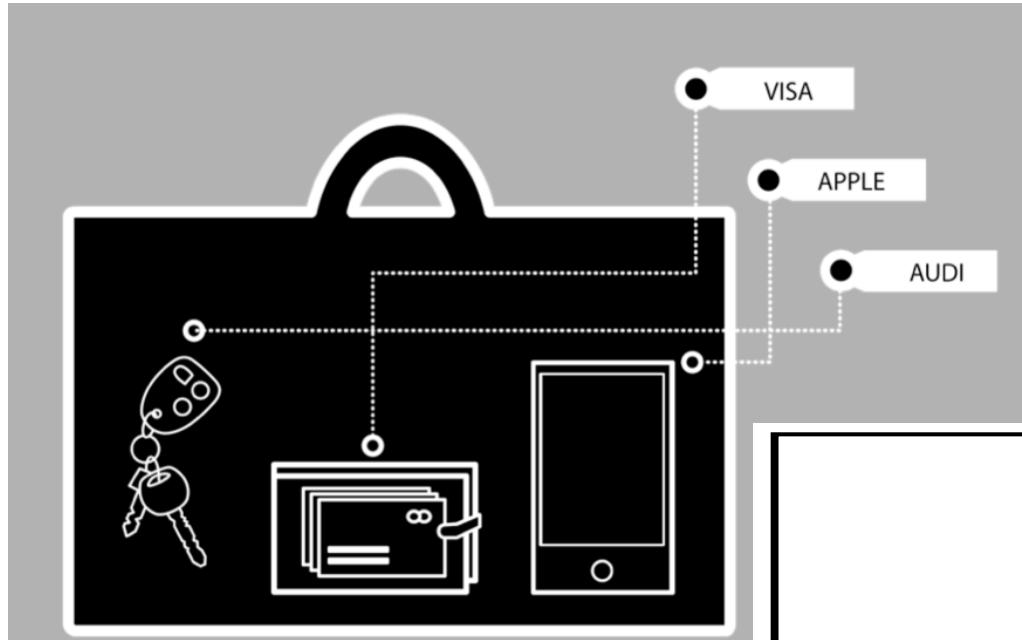

Finally, there is the county engineer himself, Robert Klaiber, who bought property
